Long ago, on the outskirts of Ancient Greece, there lived a young, brave, manly boy who loved adventures. This boy was named Cassius. He lived with his apoplectic father who was always horrible to him because he could not get over the tragic loss of his wife. She died because she had been bitten by a snake (a very poisonous snake). Ever since then, he'd been mean to Cassius...

One day, Cassius's angry father got so apoplectic he kicked Cassius out the damp, dark house so Cassius was on the dangerous streets. He was walking along the streets when...

'Argh!' screamed Cassius loudly. He had been pulled into a dark, dusty alleyway that led to a creepy nerve-cracking forest. Cassius heard four words, "Kill the deadly dragon!" Someone had pushed him into the forest. There was no turning back.
